minutes at home. Not only will they relax their mind and body, but also they will make their skin visibly smoother, softer and less irritable by re-creating the professional experience at home."

After their skin, executives need to make sure their hair is clean, cut, styled and touched up as well. This is where Boeau Belle Salon and Spa at Village on the Parkway can help.

"Men's grooming has been on a huge upswing," says Meagan Gore, style expert at Boeau Belle Salon. "Women want low-maintenance, easy-to-care-for looks. For many years now, although there are trends, there has been a shift toward personalized styles over trendy styles. I'd say once [the] 2010s hit, it really turned into a full spectrum of looks geared to each person's personality and style. We can help with that cut for men and color for women. We are a very passionate people who love what we do. It's important that our guests feel a part of this family. We are here to create a place where people can come be themselves and enjoy the experience as well as the results."

Clive and Co. in Dallas is another premium salon for haircuts and styles. "Women care about maintaining their color and cut more than ever before," says Cynthia Maxwell, in charge of trend forecasting, merchandising and creative solutions for Clive and Co. "Roots are no longer acceptable. Hair must be clean and healthy looking at all times! Hair and makeup in the office is just as important as clothes, as we are learning that something such as the not-so-subtle red lip can prove to get you noticed when it comes to getting a promotion or just nailing that presentation home. Ultimately, all successful execs are well-groomed, freshly pressed and on time!"

Another thing that executives worry about is the appearance of their teeth, since the mouth can be the focus of attention when you talk. If you are looking to impress people with more than just nice clothes and a personable demeanor, consider getting your teeth whitened like many other professionals do on a regular basis. Whitening your teeth provides the extra something that will draw people's attention to your bright smile. At Bent Tree Dental on Trinity
